

Above: Ringo Starr's 2017 "Give More Love" album cover.
 Right: "God Is Love," the Nov.-2015 artwork of Mark Gruber, who, in 2017, received an otherworldly message from the soul of John Lennon. The late-2015 work is a digitally colorized version of his Sept-2015 painting, shown in Amsterdam (see next page). Mr. Gruber did not discover this art overlap until very late 2019.

Two background works
by Selwyn Senatori

"God Is Love" was advertised with this photo, snapped, in Sept. 2015, in the Amsterdam art'otel gallery, where it was painted. The two artworks in the background are by a different artist (Selwyn Senatori). In the foreground, at bottom, the word "Peace" is in a dramatic position in the photo. (That second work is also Gruber's who received the message from Lennon's soul). On Ringo Starr's "Give More Love" album cover, there are many circular peace symbols: which, all in sum, can be seen to reflect the near circular letters "G" that are found to the right of "PEACE," on a partly visible third painting.

In the gallery photo, and down to emotional expression, Ringo's 2017 face and head seem to appear on a 2015 artwork of Selwyn Senatori. Moreover, the black, curved chair in the Amsterdam gallery looks like Ringo's black jacket and curved shoulder!

Really, this is bizarre! While the visionary did not discover the 2017 album cover until two years after its release, news of the release hit the media at about the same time that the visionary received, in NYC, his first message from John Lennon's soul. So, did Lennon's soul specifically contact this visionary because, in the next world, knowledge existed of the art overlap? After all, this almost unbelievable overlap more ensures that others would believe that Lennon's soul's message was legit.

See how, in the 2015 gallery shot used in promos (here cut down and resized), there are, to the right and left of the central “God Is Love” artwork, two red-color areas (the two paintings by Selwyn Senatori). Now, notice that, on Starr’s 2017 “Give More Love” album, that there are also two red-color areas: to the right and left of the central subject (Mr. Starr).

In the fuller gallery shot on the second page, notice the vertical text at the far right. Such vertical text is on the side edge of the partially-seen painting at far right (also by the visionary). On that edge, the word “LOVE” appears in orange (“AND TRUE LOVE REQUIRES FAITHFULNESS” is the longer text,” although in the digital, gallery photo herein used, the “D” of “AND” is partly erased. It is partly erased to protect the subconscious minds of viewers because, otherwise, as a “D” can appear to the eye as an “O,” the text might be read as “NO TRUE LOVE,” since the “A” of “AND” is not in the photo).

At top right is that orange “LOVE,” rotated 90 degrees. Notice how the aspects of that area seem to appear similarly in the Ringo album cover.
